ADMINISTRATIVE SUBDIVISIONS OF THE EAST CHINA REGIONAL ADMINISTRATIVE DISTRICT

Until the establishment of a regional people's government, the East China District is under the control of the East China Military and Political Council whose headquarters is at Shanghai. The jurisdiction of the council now extends over the four provinces of Shantung, Chekiang, Fukien, and Taiwan; the four administrative districts of South Anhwei, North Anhwei, South Kiangsu, and North Kiangsu; and the two municipalities of Shanghai and Nanking.

The East China District, excluding Taiwan, is divided into 53 special districts, one special mining district under the jurisdiction of the Tzu-po Administrative Office, nine municipalities under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments, and seven municipalities under the jurisdiction of the special districts. The total population numbers 133,223,157 while the area covers 294,322,623.44 mou (one mou equals one-sixth acre).

The administrative subdivisions of the East China District are as follows:

A. Shantung

The Shantung Provincial People's government, whose provincial seat is located at Tsinan, has jurisdiction over three administrative districts, two special districts, and four municipalities. The administrative districts are divided into 15 special districts. There are three municipalities under the direct jurisdiction of special districts; two provincially-controlled special districts with jurisdiction over 137 hsiens, of which 53 are new; one general affairs office (pan-shih-ch'ui); three districts established for specific purposes; and seven municipalities under the direct jurisdiction of special districts. The latter three are on the same governmental level as hsiens.

Excluding P'ing-yuan Hsien of the P'o-hai Administrative District, the total population of Shantung Province is 39,236,077 while the total area covers 83,332,298 mou.
